Daniel's first interest in film and photography awoke when he was asked to play the lead role in cinematographer and director Eric Hurt's (Pillage & Plunder Pictures) people's award winning short film entry 'Sweet Dreams' for the 2005 Virginia Film Festival Adrenaline Film Project.

In 2006 he was hired again for a leading role as a child actor. This time by the young awards winning director Han West (Iris Incus) for his movie 'Brothers Manor'.

Daniel realized soon that working behind the camera fascinated him more than acting in front of it. Eric Hurt, becoming Daniel's friend and mentor, hired him as his production assistant for short films, commercials, music videos, and feature films.

While attending Louisa County High School he signed up for media class where he improved his competence in creating movie style special effects. At the same time he interned at the University of Virginia's John Paul Jones Arena, in Charlottesville, Virginia designing special effects for the scoreboards.

Shortly after graduating high school Daniel began collaborating with music video producer Chrystopher Rhodes (YCImaging.com), making a name for himself as photographer, videographer and editor in the east coast rap and hip-hop scene.

Besides film and video making Daniel has increasingly developed an interest in photography a field he feels has unlimited possibilities. Daniel is currently attending Western Kentucky University pursing a major in photojournalism.

Daniel currently works for arvold shooting and editing videos for arvold's YouTube page, creating promotional content as well as editing audition session tapes.

From concept to delivery, Daniel Vorlet is committed to the highest standards of professionalism, artistic integrity and client service. With years of experience, Daniel Vorlet takes pride in providing above industry standard quality.
